natural languages such as english are difficult to understand not only because of the variety of forms that can be expressed but also because of what is not explicitly expressed the problem of deciding what was implied by a text of reading between the lines is the problem of inference for a reader to extract the proper set of inferences from a text the set that was intended by the text s author requires a great deal of general knowledge on the part of the reader as well as a capability to reason with this knowledge when the reader is a computer program it becomes very difficult to represent this knowledge so that it will be accessible when needed past approaches to the problem of inference have often concentrated on a particular type of knowledge structure such as a script and postulated an algorithm tuned to process just that type of structure the problem with this approach is that it is difficult to modify the algorithm when it comes time to add a new type of knowledge structure an alternative unified approach is proposed this approach is formalized in a computer program named faustus the algorithm recognizes six very general classes of inference classes that are not dependent on individual knowledge structures rather the classes describe general kinds of connections between concepts new kinds of knowledge can be added without modifying the algorithm thus the complexity has been shifted from the algorithm to the knowledge base to accommodate this a powerful knowledge representation language named kodiak is employed
